Turkey Seeking Pardon Makes $10 Million Donation To East Wing Ballroom

Leaked financial documents have revealed that one "enterprising" turkey named Joseph Gobbles living on a farm south of Washington, D.C. contributed a $10 million donation to President Trump's White House Ballroom, seeking a presidential pardon for his alleged involvement in a plot to overturn the 2020 presidential election.

"I believe in President Trump's vision for America and I'm proud to be a small part of the change he's bringing to this once-lost nation," explained Gobbles, "My financial contributions to the president's White House renovations are wholly unrelated, and news reporters should bawk at promoting this defamatory narrative."

Gobbles served six months in the slammer for his alleged participation in the efforts to overturn the election. Despite his legal troubles, the former jailbird has been unwavering in his support and loyalty for President Trump.

"I appreciate he saw through the corrupt Democrat Establishment's slanderous attempts to imprison me for telling the truth. I refuse to be silenced by Soros and his cronies!" asserted Gobbles when asked why he was selected for a pardon. "It's a relief that our guy is finally at the top of the pecking order."

Many critics have accused Trump of soliciting donations for his renovation plans as a part of an obvious bribery scheme, but Gobbles is insistent that his donation isn't evidence of any fowl play.

At press time, Gobbles was seen buying a billion dollars worth of TrumpCoin, which he believes is the "future of money."

Gobbles is expected to fly the coop from the DC Central Detention Facility in the week leading up to Thanksgiving.

University Agrees To Cancel Ypsi Data Center, Conduct Live Nuclear Tests There Instead

Following an outpouring of community pushback, the University Regents have agreed to cancel plans to construct a new data center in Ypsilanti. Instead, the University will conduct live nuclear tests.

The proposed data center was to be in partnership with Los Alamos National Laboratory, the institution best known for its work on the United States' nuclear arsenal, and its role in Christopher Nolan's Academy Award-winning movie, "Oppenheimer."

"We want our community to know that we hear them and we care about their thoughts on this monumental project," explained a press release from the UM Regents. "Because of that, we're excited to announce that we will be ending the data center's construction and nuking it to bits instead."

Much of the community opposition surrounding the proposed "high performance computing center" focused on the impacts it would have on the city's water, electrical, and environmental resources. "We've taken your concerns to heart and pivoted," said a university spokesperson. "With this new plan, there will be no more Ypsilanti residents to consume water, use electricity, or enjoy the environment."

"We are working our hardest to ensure that the radioactive fallout from such blasts only negatively impacts those who used to inhabit Ypsilanti," explained chief project engineer Jim McBlast. "We are working on our best containment devices to ensure the radiation only enters the water, air, and land within the soon-to-be-former boundaries of the city."

"I bet you're glad we didn't divest from all those weapons manufacturers now," said UM Regent Sarah Hubbard.

At press time, the University celebrated the decreased noise pollution impact of these nuclear blasts. According to a press release, "instead of making noise around the clock, these nuclear tests will only emit a 278 dB shockwave intense enough to liquify residents' insides for a fraction of a second."

ROTC Student Performs Citizen's Arrest On Jaywalker

While illegally crossing State Street on Monday, freshman Terry Flannigan became the subject of an unexpected citizen's arrest.

"I was just trying to get to Chipotle," asserted Flannigan. "I usually jaywalk the East Washington light without any issues. This time though, when I got to the other side, this scrawny kid in a military uniform shoved me to the ground."

The "scrawny kid" in question was sophomore Riley Jackson, who is currently enrolled in the Army ROTC program at the university. Jackson has a history when it comes to such actions, racking up a whopping 30 arrests last semester on charges ranging from littering to failure to clean up after one's dog.

"It's my duty as a future US Army soldier to keep the streets of Ann Arbor safe," stated Jackson. "You let one guy jaywalk, and the next thing you know, he's committing armed robberies. It really starts with the little things… such blatant disregard of the law cannot be tolerated."

Jackson's crusade stretches across campus, from reporting his entire dorm floor for fake ID use to monitoring football crowds for "unregulated rowdiness" – an undertaking that's already earned him a black eye and a bloody nose on two separate occasions.

"Yeah… we don't even bother to drug test that kid," reported one of Jackson's supervisors.

When the police arrived at the scene, they let Flannigan off with a warning. "They all seemed to know the guy," said Flannigan. "One of the officers even asked how his mother was doing."

"I take no pleasure in it," Jackson said, "but I will do what must be done— I will kill if necessary— to keep this campus safe."

Professor Acting Like Class Doesn't Notice Massive Pit Stains

Students in Professor Leonard Sullivan's History 292: Ancient Rome course have been taken aback by his lack of awareness of his impressive armpit stains.

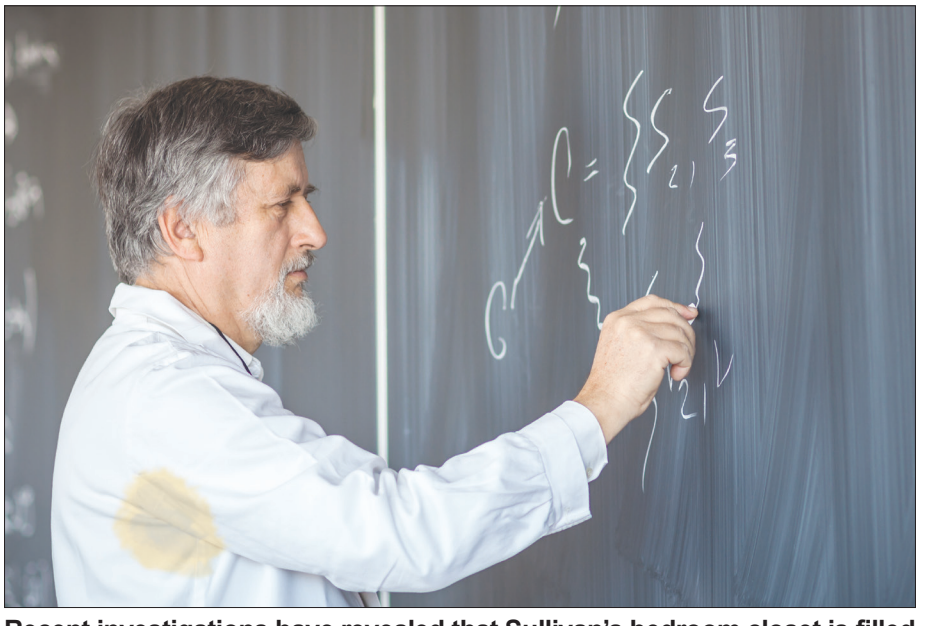
"I've really been enjoying learning about Ancient Rome, but man is it hard to watch the lectures without noticing Professor Sullivan's enormous pit stains," said junior Alice McKenna. "The craziest part is he just carries on like it's normal."

Students say that Dr. Sullivan is a "passionate lecturer" and likes to move around the classroom, which means that his underarms are often on full display for all to see. "Professor Sullivan is a great teacher who clearly wants to engage with the students," said sophomore Brad Naylor. "But, I think it's time for the guy to get some deodorant."

Naylor has also taken note of a classroom odor "unmistakably" originating from Sullivan. "Whenever Professor Sullivan walks over to my side of the classroom, I make sure to pinch my nose," he said.

Some faculty close to Dr. Sullivan say he prefers not to wear deodorant because it allows the class to become "immersed in the sights and smells of Ancient Rome."

At press time, Dr. Sullivan was overheard talking about using animal lard as shampoo.



Recent investigations have revealed that Sullivan's bedroom closet is filled entirely by white button-downs with yellow patches under the sleeves

The Michigan Every Three Weekly is a newspaper of satire and campus affairs that is not intended for readers under the age of 18 years. The Every Three Weekly uses invented names in its stories except in cases where public figures and prominent University members are being satirized or described. Any other use of real names is accidental and coincidental. The statements and opinions within the Michigan Every Three Weekly are not necessarily the views of its sponsors, UAC, or the University of Michigan.

For one, Hannah and I would like to acknowledge the unending support of UAC, who never fail to inspire us to be better as a club and as, first and foremost, the University of Michigan's premier advertising agency.
Sam here, and this year I'm thankful for Motor City frozen pizzas, Coors Banquet, and the dutch oven that belongs to someone in my apartment (I'm not sure who). That thing cooks a mean one-pot meal and really makes me question the structural integrity of my stove. I would like to mention that I am expressly not thankful for Campus Realty's maintenance crew, who took a solid two days to fix the continuous leak in my kitchen ceiling. Our cabinets smell funny now.
This is Nolan and I'm just wondering if we can get the flags at full mast again. I understand having to do it for a little bit because he was a Vice President or whatever, but at this point it just feels gratuitous. It's been over a week and I know nobody here cares that much about Dick.
This is Josiah, and I'd like to apologize for yelling at Reganne during my IM soccer game.
This is Reganne, and I do not accept your apology.
This is Jessica, and I'd like to give a shoutout to the people who saw me hack up a golf ball-sized glob of mucus and spit it onto the sidewalk 20 minutes ago. I'm sorry, and you're welcome?

Friend Who Can't Cook For Shit "Really Wants To Have Friendsgiving"

Parker's friends were last seen placing a large pizza order "just in case."

Reports indicate that local woman Sam Parker is "very excited" for her friends to host Friendsgiving this year, despite her long history of culinary failures.

"I just love the idea of Friendsgiving," clarified Parker. "I mean, eating delicious food, hanging out with your friends, watching a movie, bringing only plastic cups and paper plates…"

"Of course Sam wants to have Friendsgiving," reported one of her closest friends, Amanda Sparks. "She tried to make me cookies after a bad breakup last year, and they tasted like goddamn shoe rubber. Honestly, the cookies were worse than the breakup. Hell, the last time she came over, that bitch couldn't even make microwave popcorn without me having to pull out my fire extinguisher. How is that even possible? It's literally one step!"

"Everytime we do something like this, she just offers to bring napkins," explains another member of the prospective group, Sally Andrews. "She's always looking to bum meals off of us. I mean, this summer we had a picnic, she literally took EVERY LAST ONE of the leftovers… even Amanda's nasty-ass Jello salad. If it were up to her, 'Friendsgiving' would basically just be her looting our kitchens like the Grinch."

Despite their concerns, the group of women have agreed to host the event. "I mostly just want her to still afford our New Year's trip to Cancun," Sparks later said, citing Parker's "concerning" DoorDash habit.

Insecure Parking Pass Needs Validation

Friedland regularly assured the parking pass that she would still love it even if it was a worm.

According to reports coming from the Maynard Street parking structure, an insecure little parking pass is demanding validation.

Ann Arbor resident Patty Friedland confirmed that the parking pass began demanding validation as soon as it was dispensed. "Before I could even make a proper judgment, it began insisting that it receive approval," reported the recently parked motorist.

Even more shocking was the fact that Patty's validation wasn't sufficient for the self-doubting parking slip. "I kept on reassuring that I valued it very much and promised that I'd bring it with me everywhere for the rest of the day," she said. Nevertheless, the ticket insisted it be endorsed by a participating nearby business.

Friedland added that the self-doubting parking pass bombarded her with uncomfortable confrontations like "do you even like me" and "am I too flat", and "I bet you'd love me more if I was a movie ticket."

"After a while I got fed up and threatened to park elsewhere," said Friedland. "That's when things got really bad. It started attacking me, claiming I only wanted them for 'the access they gave me to its open spaces'." This then devolved into the pass ruthlessly slinging insults at competing parking garages.

"I'm starting to think that the ticket doesn't even want to feel good about itself," continued Friedland. "When I suggested it try therapy, it said that there weren't any therapists with the proper 'stamp of approval.'"

At press time, the ticket was overheard slut-shaming free parking spots, claiming they'll "just let anyone slip right in."

Campus Disturbance "Just Guys Being Guys," According To Guys

An unusual, unidentified ruckus on South Forest Avenue this past Sunday night woke many Ann Arbor residents and left them concerned for the safety of their neighborhood. Multiple upstanding guys have since spoken out to clarify that whatever happened was "just guys being guys."

"Yeah, some of my bros and I were just out and about bangin' the bees if you know what I mean," said Brandon Armstrong, a kinesiology major and co-president of the Alpha Gamma fraternity. "We were really just dudes being bros. It was actually really chill."

Chad Peterson, a Ross student and member of the neighboring Lambda Phi Pi house, added: "Oh yeah, I saw what happened, and it was actually dope as hell. Those guys are mad cool. Nah, I don't think anyone should be worried because AG is rad ya know."

James Johnson, a pedestrian who witnessed the incident, tried to make sense of the situation: "So I wasn't quite sure what I was looking at, but I think it was just some chums sweeping out the trail mix, for real. I wish I had amigos on their free throws like that, for real."

DPSS Officer Liam Jefferson who responded to the incident said, "Despite the numerous calls about the incident, there's nothing we can do. It's just dudes being bros. Some friendly male on male bonding. Homies racing the horses, if you know what I mean."

At press time, Armstrong, Peterson, and Johnson had started an intramural basketball team called the "the Chad Bro Squad."

Remarkably Ugly Classmate Has Pure, Loving Soul

Sophomore Shelly Gaetz said she initially viewed one of her classmates as "unbearably ugly" before discovering that he possessed what she described as "a beautiful soul."

"Every time I walked into my Econ 102 class, I would glance at him and think to myself, 'what a waste of human genetics,'" said Gaetz. The classmate, who asked to remain anonymous, was so visually offensive that Gaetz felt significantly better about herself in comparison to him.

Her worldview changed, however, after witnessing the classmate caring for a baby duckling that had lost its mother. Between his 19 credit hours and his volunteer shifts at the local soup kitchen, most of his time is dedicated to the care of Sylvester, a 2-month old duckling with AIDS.

Unable to believe that such a pure heart could be behind such a "butt-ugly stupid face," Gaetz scoured his social media. She found several Instagram posts about suicide awarness, with one commentor thanking the classmate for having stopped them from jumping off of a bridge the previous year, as well as a few political posts that aligned exactly with Gaetz' own views.

"I was so wrong about ugly people," confessed Gaetz. "They can really be incredible people. Of course, I will still sit on the opposite side of the classroom. Nobody else knows for sure that he's not a pedophile, I can't be associated with him."

Shitty Groupmates Outcompeted By Shitty AI

Based on recent data collected by the University's Department of Computer Science & Engineering, experts believe that roles which have historically been held by hopeless, inept groupmates are going to start getting taken over by artificial intelligence. This comes with the industry's continued commitment to wasting drinking water, so an AI can take even longer to give you the same wrong, unclear answer.

"I really don't see a future where the shitty groupmates can remain," said Sarah Greene, one of the researchers involved in the study. "AI is simply better at wasting time and energy, trusting unreliable sources, confidently providing verifiably false information, and being morally questionable."

Some students report already seeing these changes happening in their classes. Steven Johnson, a freshman enrolled in CHEM 130, spoke about the impact it was having on his weekly lab. "My groupmate almost seemed like he was capable of lighting a Bunsen burner without burning both of our eyebrows off, so I decided to start asking Chat GPT how to do the labs instead. Thankfully, it did an amazing job of feeding me incorrect instructions, failing at simple arithmetic, and, just like my old groupmate, it never fills out its assigned slides."

StudyBeast, an AI startup hoping to capitalize on the current market for AI study tools, discussed some of the features it plans to add to its next AI. "We were really hoping to give it some new features so it feels just like working with a real person on a project. It's now capable of procrastinating, ignoring the user's messages, and even blaming the final project grade on the user, who is the only one who actually did anything."

At press time, StudyBeast introduced a breakthrough feature that allowed its AI to make politically incorrect comments, in addition to deleting the user's work and replacing it with grammatically incorrect sentences.

Roommates Take Non-Intervention Stance On Months Old Leftovers In Fridge

Despite the non-intervention agreement, reports indicate that several roommates have already begun drafting texts to the group chat which would deny responsibility for the leftovers and subtly shift blame to other roommates.

According to preliminary reports, residents of 503 S Forest Ave, Dan Phillips, Nina Weismann, Alex Green, and Charlize Thompson, have agreed to take a non-intervention approach to the chicken parmesan leftovers that have been in their fridge for more than two months.

Based on leaked chat messages, the conflict flared up after Phillips' message to the apartment group chat instructing "whoever forgot about their chicken leftovers in the fridge" to "clean that shit out ASAP" didn't solve the problem.

"All the culprit would've had to do is take the tupperware out of the fridge and throw it in the trash can a few feet away," said Phillips. Phillips claimed he didn't do it himself because he "ain't touching that shit."

"My roommates should be mature enough to realize that this issue is bigger than just one person. Playing the blame game isn't going to stop our fridge from becoming the next EPA superfund site," complained Weismann. "But I'm a vegetarian so the leftovers couldn't be mine, and it wouldn't be fair for me to have to touch them."

Green also expressed disappointment at his roommates' inaction. "There is currently a $2 tupperware standing between our fridge and a generation-defining biohazard incident. This is no time for finger pointing. We need decisive action." Green later lamented that he had "totally been meaning" to toss the rotting food, but "it just slipped [his] mind."

At press time, the apartment agreed that a non-intervention approach would be the best path forward to avoid a "long, drawn out conflict" and "never ending arguments." The roommates concluded that "the situation seems to be stable for the time being, so there's clearly no reason to believe that it could possibly change in the future."

Friend Soft-Launches Breakup By Hanging Out With You Again

Reports show that sophomore Jenny Lawson recently "soft-launched" a breakup by inconspicuously posting a photo with her best friend for the first time since getting a boyfriend this September.

Followers of Lawson's Instagram noted that all of her recent posts featured her and her boyfriend, senior Jake Prescott, doing things like hanging out in Prescott's car, Prescott's apartment, and occasionally the cafe where Prescott's ex works. Suddenly, she posted a picture to her story of two cups of boba and tagged her best friend's account.

"That's when I knew it was over between her and Jake," said Lawson's roommate. "She hasn't hung out with a person who isn't her boyfriend in two months and now she just texted me asking to go thrifting with her next weekend. It's like she's dropping little hints that she's returning to her former self. Also, I knew that the boba picture didn't involve Jake at all because he thinks drinking from those wide straws is 'gay' or something."

When asked about his girlfriend, Prescott's friends said "who?" and "oh, the girl who looks exactly like his sister?" They also noted that Jake had not posted about Lawson at all, not even for National Girlfriend Day, National Girlfriend Day 2, or National Girlfriend Day Again Somehow.

At press time, Lawson was seen liking breakup reels and posted Kelly Clarkson's "Since U Been Gone" using the Instagram Notes feature. Lawson's former friend group has speculated that Lawson will soon hard-launch the breakup by deleting all photos that feature Prescott from her grid.

"Buy Now Pay Later" User Wearing Gucci Belt, Prada Glasses, Finds Out Later Is Today

Junior Katie Whinkle, frequently spotted roaming campus outfitted with multiple designer brands, was seen in shambles last Saturday after the bill came due on several Klarna purchases she made last month.

"They seemed like such good deals," said Whinkle. "I got a Louis Vuitton tote for just 5 bucks every month for the rest of my life. And with the S&P being what it is, if I could keep out of the adjusted rate, yeah, I'll pay 2 percent to put that equity in the market."

But sometimes even well intentioned buyers can end up over extended.

"Look, I made some mistakes," said Whinkle. "Did I use my apple pay for an options play on some little league games? Undoubtedly. Could it have worked? Absolutely. I mean, how was I supposed to know Apple Cash is real money?"

Whinkle's spending habits were encouraged by some of her friends.

"I explained the benefits of some credit cards to her, what am I supposed to do, not collect the referral bonuses?" said Maxine Stevens, student, daytrader, vintage fashion reseller, and Whinkle's close friend according to paperwork filed to receive $400 in referral bonuses to credit card companies last month alone. "She went rogue, and that's on her, if she had put the money tied up in those chunky glasses into the Cameroonian elections market like I told her to, maybe she wouldn't be so deep in horse-shit right now that I almost can't tell how ugly that jacket is on her."

At press time, Whinkle is trading her Tag for bitcoin to cover a big loss on a Polymarket bid for the Ukraine war.

ADA Accessible Stall To Be Placed In Bathroom With Heavy Manual Door

Hutchins later clarified that the University was not seeking to target students with disabilities, but that this policy was part of a general campaign by the University to make campus unliveable for everyone, regardless of identity.

This past Wednesday, university spokesperson Mary Anne Hutchins announced that all future campus construction projects will abide by the school's precedent of only placing ADA compliant stalls in bathrooms with heavy manual doors.

"The Americans with Disabilities Act is a significant piece of legislation that we must adhere to," Hutchins said. "With that being said, while disabled students have complained about needing to travel between floors just to get to a bathroom they can access, we think adding heavy manual doors to these bathrooms is a sensible solution."

"Sometimes it's funny because those gender neutral private bathrooms will sometimes have a disability access symbol on them," LSA senior Cassandra Maduro commented. "But good luck trying to open those doors if they don't have an electronic door-opener on the wall."

"One time, someone held open the door for me and I was greeted with a converted accessible stall where they made more room by just taking a divider off the wall," Maduro continued. "I got to choose between two toilets."

Other buildings around campus that have had complaints filed for inaccessible public bathrooms include Hatcher, Ross, residential buildings, and every other building on campus with a bathroom.

"What those complaints do not understand is that meeting a law's minimum level of compliance is just a general university policy," Hutchins said.

At press time, construction teams were seen skipping installing heavy doors and instead just building steps leading in and out of every bathroom.

Specific Cream And Cream-Related Activities Not Welcome At Michigan Creamery For Some Reason

A recent incident has indicated that Michigan Creamery, a popular ice cream establishment in Ann Arbor, is not as fond of cream as its name would suggest. The reason behind this apparent contradiction in values is not yet entirely clear.

The incident occurred at 10:35 p.m. on Tuesday when Harry Lowe, who was waiting in line, activated a small, though "actually above-average if we're being statistically accurate," personalized cream-dispensing device in keeping with the theme of the establishment.

This action was met with cries of "what the fuck are you doing," and "get the hell out of here you sick freak" from customers and staff. Police were quickly called to the establishment, and one particularly aggressive customer unleashed physical violence upon Lowe when some cream accidentally spilled on their shirt.

"This incident is a dire warning for all those who care about freedom of speech in America," Lowe said. "The theme of this place is cream, either which way, I was exercising my free speech rights, and this is how I get treated? I thought America was a free country."

Lowe said this is not the first time he has been met with restaurants being implacably hostile to activities supposedly in keeping with their themes. "One time I was feeling boba, so I went to go get some at Quickly. I thought to myself 'oh hey, I finish stuff quickly all the time.' Little did I know that the boba people weren't fans of me beginning at all."

Guy Walking Into Lecture Without Backpack Must Remember Everything

Reports indicate that Data Science major Kenneth Nesbin has never taken his backpack to lecture, nor taken a single note.

"Yeah, I mean I've just got a really good memory, so I find taking notes pretty pointless. Plus, the prof says she'll post her annotated slides after lecture, so it's like double pointless," said Nesbin.

"Whenever I say I post my slides, there's always that one jerk off who uses that as an excuse to never take notes," said Nesbin's professor, Kathy Daytona. "Little does he know that I don't post those slides until two days before the exam. God, I love my job."

Many students have remarked about their opinions on Nesbin and his behavior. "I cannot believe the balls on this kid," said classmate Cindy Crawland. "He's messaged me every week complaining about how he doesn't understand any of the homework and thinks he's gonna fail the midterm."

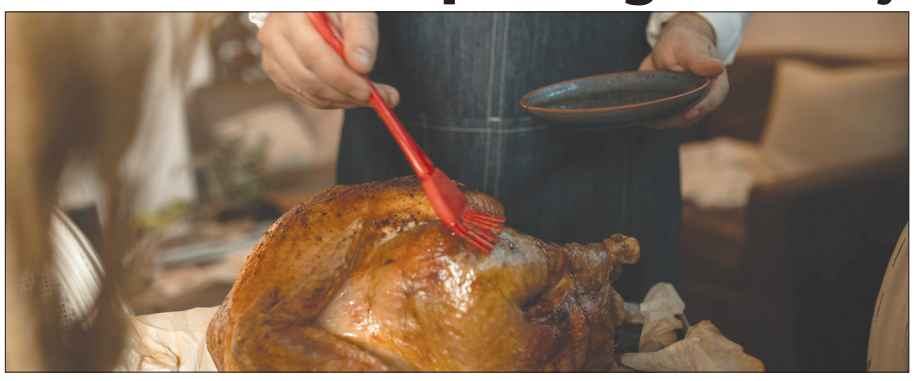
"Personally, I think it's kind of fun," said another student. "Gives major 'last day of Kindergarten' vibes."

Nathan Kent, who typically sits next to Nesbin in lecture, noted that Nesbin's habit of playing games on his phone for the entire lecture "doesn't even break top five as far as annoying lecture behaviors go."`

At press time, Nesbin was seen walking around campus in a shorts and t-shirt despite the temperature being below freezing.

Nesbin carried this habit over to the class's first exam, showing up with no calculator and no pencils.

Wife Stares Longingly At Husband Preparing Turkey



Although flattered, the turkey said that Ken was "not [their] type."

Tensions are reported to be high in the Magus household this Thanksgiving, as Bella Magus "watches jealously" while her husband Ken prepares this year's turkey.

Bella was overheard making snide comments, including, "He used to touch me like that," as Ken prepared the bird for cooking. Further, when Ken began to pour olive oil on the turkey, she commented, "Oh, but when I asked him to use oils that was too kinky."

"You know," she told her mother over appetizers, "when we were at the store to buy the damn thing, he mentioned the turkey's weight, but he said it like it was a good thing! I can't even think of a single fucking time in our relationship where he complimented my weight."

As the night progressed, and Bella was spotted drinking what appeared to be her fourth glass of chardonnay, she began directing a number of "pointed" comments to her husband: "I wish you'd taste my breasts" and "you haven't looked at me with such hunger in years."

After over an hour of reported "badgering," bystanders claim that Ben yelled, "Jesus, I don't want to fuck that bird!" Bella responded, shouting, "Well, I guess me and the turkey have more in common than I initially thought!"

Mamdani Refuses To Condemn Hittite Invasion Of Ancient Egypt

Zohran Mamdani, the newly-elected mayor of New York City, has come under fire recently for refusing to condemn the invasion of Ancient Egypt by the Hittite Empire in 1274 B.C. The war saw several thousand charioteers die in the battle of Kadesh, alongside other events of deep relevance to New York City municipal politics.

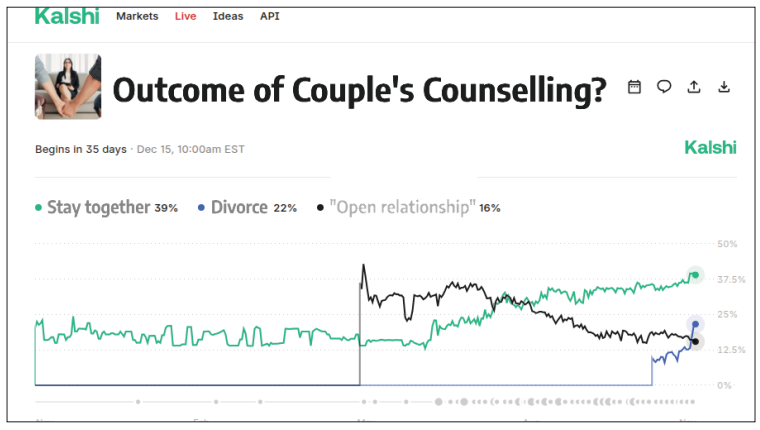
Andrew Cuomo, former governor and failed independent mayoral candidate, levied the accusation against Mamdani while stumbling around the Hamptons in what one onlooker described as a "disturbed, almost zombie-like haze."

"He refuses to condemn the slogan 'kuēnzi ḫūmanz-Ketas, aggātar sma harsauwar ca urāni sma happiriya,'" Cuomo said. "That means kill the Pharaoh's subjects, raze their fields and burn their cities."

While Mamdani could not be reached for comment, Republican candidate Curtis Sliwa was happy to provide his experiences. "I remember having a run in with the Hittite King Muwatalli II," Sliwa said. "I got shot with an arrow in a bronze chariot by some of his goons in 1992 B.C. while I was doing a parade, never ridden in one since."

1549 years before press time, Mamdani was very conspicuously not seen condemning the capture of Rome, the eternal city, by the germanic barbarian Odoacer, who also stabbed Sliwa in the back of an alleyway in 456 A.D.

Kalshi Opens Market For Parents' Divorce



The new feature has been immediately popular with children's therapists and bartenders.

On Tuesday, Kalshi, a platform that allows people to place bets on real-life events, announced that they will be opening a new market that allows users to bet on the likelihood of their parents' divorce.

"The goal of Kalshi has always been to connect people to ongoing events that they care about, which is why we are excited to launch a brand-new opportunity for people to become even more invested in the health and stability of their parents' marriage," explained CEO Tarek Mansour.

Wall Street supporters have praised this newest update as a unique opportunity for people to profit off of their mommy and daddy issues. In addition to the chance to bet on the likelihood of their parents' divorce, Kalshi plans to roll out additional features that allow people to make over-under bets on how long each fight will last and parlay with the outcomes of custody battles and asset splitting.

The divorce market is set to be open to the public, news that has reportedly thrilled nosey neighbors and divorce lawyers, who say that they no longer need to take a retainer anymore.

"Teaching doesn't pay me enough to deal with warring parents and their child's emotional damage," said Anne Banks, a local kindergarten teacher, "but Kalshi's divorce market will compensate more than enough. I'm going all in on yes, and I guarantee you that dad's willing to trade custody for the Corvette."

White House To Offer Black Friday Discount On Pardons

According to a Truth Social post, The White House will be offering a number of deals and discounts on all pardons for Black Friday.

The social media post, which included an AI-generated video depicting citizens throwing cash and grovelling at the feet of the president, stated that "for one day ONLY, PRESIDENT TRUMP will be rewarding TRUE PATRIOTS for their LOYALTY with an EXCLUSIVE 45-47% DISCOUNT on ALL PARDONS!!"

The post went on to detail that "unlike the DIRTY DEMS," the Trump White House is "actually doing SOMETHING about the AFFORDABILITY CRISIS" by reducing the price of their standard pardon package from a $200,000 donation to Trump's presidential library fund to a "one time purchase of $106,000 of $TRUMP meme coin."

The Republican response to the Black Friday deals was overwhelmingly positive. Speaker of the House Mike Johnson expressed his support for the announcement, celebrating President Trump's efforts to "reshore American corruption."

Democrats were quick to point out that the deals were "just blatantly illegal," and that they would be taking "swift action to hold The President accountable" by "filing a lawsuit in federal court that'll be heard in 8-12 months."

At press time, reports suggested that the "DOORBUSTER DEALS" would also apply to unofficial favors, cabinet appointments, and "good old fashioned bribes," all of which, The White House has assured, will be manufactured in the US.

Cosmetic Surgeon Promises Neon Aquamarine Eyes Gonna Look Natural In A Few Days

Doctor James Bailey has gone viral for his innovative surgery which permanently alters the colors of a patient's corneas. However, several clients have recently complained that the colors do not look natural, despite reassurances that they will fade over time.

One of Bailey's past customers, Veronica Hertz complained, saying, "I asked Dr. Bailey for light blue eyes, and he gave me this neon aquamarine monstrosity." She continues, "My family can't even look me in the eyes. At first I thought it was the gushing blood caused by the laser directed into my corneas, but now I know it's definitely the color."

Another customer, Joshua Bertam corroborated Veronica's story, saying, "My eyes now burn every time I close them. I'm also pretty pissed he gave me blood red instead of hazel."

On a livestream to set the record straight, Bailey said "It only looks unnatural for the first thirty years. After that the color mellows out. Also," he went on to say, "the eyes come with such fun features. They even glow in the dark! Not only is that so sick, but it's actually extremely important considering how much this is going to dim your vision."

At press time Veronica was seen googling 'Who is Satoru Gojo?'

Dessert With 'Hidden Protein' Looks Like It Contains Exactly That Much Protein

Fitness influencer and self-proclaimed chef Madison Genston has gone viral this past week for her series on baking healthy, protein-packed desserts. Her most recent confectionary, however, received harsh criticism online due to its "less than appetizing" appearance and contents.

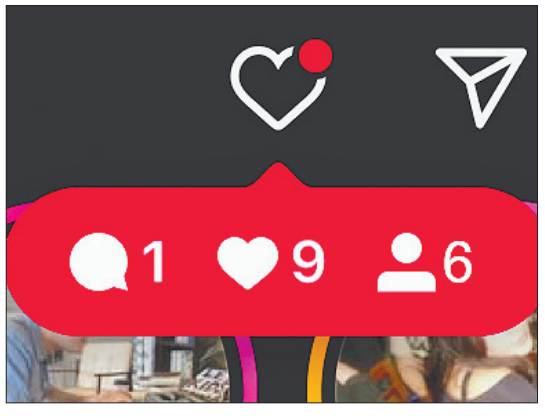
In her angel's food cake, Madison instructed, "You're going to want to blend three cups of cottage cheese until it's nice and smooth. Then add in two scoops of vanilla protein powder, and half a rotisserie chicken, shredded. Once all of that is incorporated, cook at 500 degrees for three hours. Then you'll be left with a delicious treat, and you can't even tell it has 100 grams of protein!"

Among her chief critics, @Jer_ren on Tiktok commented, "Hidden protein? That 'cake' slid out of the pan and hit the counter like a brick. I don't know what's more dense: you or the cake?" Others have commented, "What texture could this have possibly achieved" and "It should be illegal to even call this thing a cake."

A more sympathetic, but equally confused long-time fan Kirstin James asked, "What do you do if you don't like cottage cheese? I really don't like the idea of hot, wet cottage cheese baked for several hours, but that seems like a very key ingredient here."

At press time Madison was seen buying five industrial-sized containers of cottage cheese from Costco.

Area Man Reports Most Pleasurable Part Of Orgy Just Gaining Six New Instagram Followers



Lambert said he draws the line at using an orgy as an opportunity to increase his Snap score.

According to junior Alex Lambert, whose experience attending orgies is "extensive," the aspect he relishes most is the opportunity to increase his Instagram following.

"I remember this one girl was blowing me but all I could think about was how orgasmic it's going to feel when I finally surpass two thousand followers," said Lambert. "I even requested a guy's account while he was still inside me, just because I like to be proactive sometimes."

Lambert described orgies as the perfect social setting because he need not actually converse with any of the attendees, but they were involved in a situation intimate enough to warrant at least an Instagram follow.

"I went to an Eyes Wide Shut-esque soirée once where everyone was wearing elaborate masks to protect their identity but they were still willing to give me their IG handles for some reason. That's why I follow several people on the U-M Board of Regents," continued Lambert.

Lambert's roommate, senior John Markevich, said, "I have no idea how Alex has so many Instagram followers. He doesn't talk to anyone and never leaves the house except for like three hours every Friday night." Markevich's own account, on which he consistently posts semierotic sculptures made of Legos, has amassed 42 followers since inception.

At press time, Lambert said he will begin asking fellow orgy attendees to connect with him on LinkedIn in an effort to expand his professional network.

Trump Now Doing Air Quotes Every Time He Refers To 2028 "Election"

Trump later clarified that he would "totally follow the Constitution, for sure," although some observers described his tone as "more than a little sarcastic."

In recent interviews, President Trump has begun doing air quotes with his fingers every time he talks about the 2028 presidential "election."

Trump, who has repeatedly refused to say whether he intends to retain the presidency after his current term expires, began talking about the 2028 "election" unprompted while speaking to reporters aboard Airforce One on Monday.

"I hear there's supposed to be an 'election' in 2028, that's what they tell me," Trump said. "I don't know anything about it, I don't even think about it because I'm so busy saving the country, but that's just what I hear, that they're thinking of doing an 'election' in 2028."

The president was wearing a hat that read "TRUMP 2028," however he declined to comment on the hat or address any implications to which the hat might give rise.

Speaker of the House Mike Johnson told reporters he was not aware either of the president's new habit or of the fact that there was supposed to be an election in 2028. Additionally, Johnson was unsure who the president was, what the current year was, and where he was, and even seemed not to recognize his own name.

When asked about the 2028 election, Vice President JD Vance said, "I try not to think about the future. It's easier that way."

At press time, Trump added a wink.

Bezos Explains Riches Still Unworthy Of Passage Of Ba To Du'at For Final Reckoning With Osiris

In a recent statement, billionaire Jeff Bezos explained that his current cache of funerary goods will not be sufficient to convey his Ka, Ba, and Akh across the Nile and into the Field of Reeds for eternal rest, necessitating an even greater net worth than his current 250 billion dollars.

Bezos plans to be embalmed with salt and buried with a horde of gold, turquoise, and carnelian, as well as a sizable legion of mummified retainers. "We will choose them via trial," said Bezos. "Come next full moon, the first man in each of my warehouses to sit down in a chair shall be sacrificed."

With enough riches, Bezos may be able to cross to Du'at and hold an audience with Osiris himself. Otherwise, he will be boiled in the Lake of Flames. But Bezos doesn't find this likely: "Nothing is easier than a rich man entering the kingdom of God," he explained. "My only wish is that someday my eight billion serfs can rest their heads totally assured that my riches will join me in Sekhet-Aaru."

Bezos also revealed that he has been quietly funding the construction of an interstellar pyrimidine tomb where he will be interred in his final days.

"We are all lighter in space than the smallest feather is on Earth," Bezos told the press. "But we are all not great enough to reach such heights. Poors like Thunberg think their poverty is a virtue. When their hearts are measured against Ma'at, they will realize the weight of their empty words."

Bezos has requested that drawings of his yacht, private jet, and Amazon shares adorn the chamber walls so they can appear with him in the afterlife.

"Weird Al" Yankovic Releases Kendrick Lamar Parody "They Don't Like Crust"

Beloved parody songwriter "Weird Al" Yankovic, eleven years after the release of his previous studio album, recently released a surprise single. Yankovic is known for his comedic, wacky tunes satirizing pop culture and pop music. While die-hard Weird Al fans are excited for his return, many are critical of the content of the song. "They Don't Like Crust," a bread-themed parody of Kendrick Lamar's 2024 hit "Not Like Us," has received a polarized response, being considered a "wildly tone-deaf" release by many involved in the hip-hop scene, with additional criticism for "attempting to capitalize on a trend that ended last year."

According to music critic Anthony Fantano: "While 'Not Like Us' is a masterclass diss track that effectively ended the Lamar-Drake feud while simultaneously leveling scathing criticism against cultural appropriation and exploitation, 'They Don't Like Crust' is an utterly stupid parody song that will effectively end Weird Al's career while simultaneously dishing out 'stale' puns that not even your white middle aged dad would smirk at."

Some of the offending lines, according to critics, include: "Mustard on the bread, bro, Man down, need something to eat, give him sourdough," "Why you baking like a chef, wait an hour, Tryna bake a loaf and it's probably grain flourrrrrrrrrrrrrr," "You bakers'll get a grease fire, get burned lest your dough flakes, What's the OVO for? The Other Vanilla Oatcake?"

Yankovic opened up about the backlash in an Instagram post following the surprise drop, saying "they just don't get it. the world be so fucked up. peace, i'll see you when the world is ready, fam. fuck."

Geriatric Mother-Of-Five Thinks 'Yuri' Some Russian Guy In Space

A Michigan mom has been committed to a dementia village after confusing the romance genre known as "Girls' Love" for the Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin.

Trudy Wilkerson, 40, of Grand Blanc raised alarms while on a phone call confronting her daughter, freshman Katherine Wilkerson, about a stack of manga hidden under Katherine's childhood bed. According to Katherine, Trudy named Gagarin several times unprompted while she offered an explanation.

Files from Pinedale Memory Center reveal that Trudy spiraled into a nervous breakdown that persisted hours into her first day at the institution. Specialists who managed her intake proceedings wrote that Trudy was especially confused about the distinction between yaoi and yuri, repeatedly asking whether it had anything to do with "that interracial homosexual propaganda stuff from the fifties."

Katherine's worst fears were allayed when she visited her mother, who mentioned to her that she had recently finished Hitoma Iruma's novel Adachi and Shimamura and had since moved onto the TV series. "So beautiful and moving," Trudy had told Katherine. "Have you ever heard of this lesbian stuff? I think you'd like it."

Still, Katherine is haunted by the memory of her mother's breakdown. "She kept bringing up this astronaut from someplace called the Soviet Union," Katherine told reporters. "She said he went around the Earth or to the moon or something. I kept trying to tell her: there's no such thing as the Soviet Union, and nobody has ever been on the moon."

Next Tyler, the Creator Album Cover To Once Again Feature Himself With Mouth Open

This new project project will focus on topics previously unexplored by the artist, such as his complicated love life, cars, fashion, and profanity.

This past Tuesday on social media, Tyler, the Creator released a sneak peak of his upcoming album cover: yet another portrayal of himself with his mouth agape.

Tyler continues the trend of album covers that show varying amounts of his pearly whites, which includes his most recent release CHROMOKOPIA+, as well as previous releases Don't Tap the Glass, IGOR, Flower Boy, Cherry Bomb, and Wolf.

"We've offered Tyler suggestions of alternative album covers where his mouth wouldn't be open, but we've had limited success," Tyler's record label, Columbia Studios, said in a statement. "We don't fully understand his decision, but he's got great dental hygiene and we're okay with anything that brings us in the big bucks."

"You'd think it's just a coincidence, but if you watch his interviews, he tends to remain slack-jawed like that," remarked fan Fiona Humphrey. "I think that's just his typical idle state."

"It's amazing how he never drools," fan Marco Urban said. "And we're all thrilled about the cover drop, but you can almost see his molars."

At press time, fans were theorizing that Tyler's nasal cavities have been somehow obstructed for nearly a decade.

Divorced Man Notes Catastrophic Hurricane Aptly Named Melissa

Key West resident Ken Fielding, a charter boat captain and former Marine recently separated from his wife of 10 years, has remarked that the recent category 5 hurricane that devastated several Caribbean islands is aptly named after that "bitch from hell, Melissa."

"She destroyed my life, okay", Ken told the press. "She wrecked all my stuff, sunk my boat, and claimed my goddamn house too. I have to start all over from scratch."

Ken, reminiscing on "the moment my life was turned upside-down," said, "Everything was still and calm. Too calm. And she came howling in. You woulda thought it was the end of the world." His friends often note that it is often unclear whether he is referring to the catastrophic tropical storm or his ex-wife.

Dylan Sharps, one of Ken's fellow veterans, notes that "he was ranting and raving, saying 'she's on an absolute rampage, wrecking an entire resort spa, destroying dozens of Jamaican men since the minute she landed,' and honestly I'm too afraid to ask what he's referring to."

At press time, Ken was seen screaming at God from amid the wreckage of his Key West home, cursing him for sending "this disaster" that "took away my kids."

Rage Bait Not Effective On Fish

A recent report from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service states that all attempts at using "rage bait" to catch fish are unfortunately futile.

"I've seen people use weird things as bait before, like dog food or marshmallows," said Sarah Moore, a wildlife biologist at the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. "But now, many are turning to subtle emotional manipulation tactics to lure fish in."

"I have a lot of go-to phrases when I rage bait fish," said local fisherman Larry Sanders. "One is, 'Hey, do you want a piece of my sushi? Oh, wait.' Then, another classic is 'Something smells fishy…I think it's coming from you…' or 'I've got bigger fish to fry.' If they don't respond to me, which is usually the case, I hit them with a 'Whatever, there are plenty of fish in the sea,' and I call them 'bottom feeders' which is a terrible insult in the fish community. Or so I imagine."

Despite Sanders' attempts, the fish-related rage bait has been ineffective. "God, these dumbass bottom-feeders don't know anything about audience engagement. Their feeds are probably just full of wholesome kelp or shrimp. Their attention spans are just too short to appreciate my content," said Sanders, before punching a wall.

At press time, Sanders was seen trying to use clickbait on fish instead with a bobber reading, "I SURVIVED 3 AM KRAKEN CHALLENGE (Scary) (Gone Wrong)."

JD Vance Not Invited To White House Friendsgiving

The event was momentarily derailed after Putin forgot to bring the paper plates he signed up for.

Insider sources revealed that Vice President JD Vance was not invited to President Trump's Friendsgiving last Friday, despite his proximity to the President.

"He's just not part of Trump's elite inner circle," said the ghost of Jeffery Epstein, who was invited to the party despite being unable to consume any of the food. "[Trump] has always been my closest friend, vacation buddy, and favorite co-pedo…I mean enjoyer of young women. JD Vance's taste is too old. I mean, look at Erika Kirk... she's what, mid 20s? 30s? Way too old."

Other attendees included Vladimir Putin, Benjamin Netanyahu, numerous members of the Saudi Royal Family, and Beelzebub, the Prince of Demons.

"I had no idea I'd be in the room with such esteemed individuals," said Jeremy Platt, a man from Kansas who Trump met earlier that morning. "Trump called us his 'inner circle' and 'closest friends.' He even told me there was a cool office I could have in the West Wing."

Attendees were reportedly "not impressed" by the raw milk and bear meat smoothies brought by Robert F. Kennedy Jr., Secretary of Health and Human Services. Viktor Orban, Prime Minister of Hungary and a close Trump ally, said that he "hoped a worm would eat the part of my brain containing the memory [of the smoothie]."

At press time, Vance was seen eating a silent dinner at the end of a very long table lit by a single candle.

$500 Million In Federal Funding For Food Banks Rightfully Redistributed To One-Eighteen-Thousandth Of Pentagon Budget

As the U.S. Department of Agriculture cut $500 million in funding for food banks in March, Americans gleefully rejoiced as the Big Beautiful Bill reallocated that money towards a negligible fraction of the Pentagon's Fiscal Year 2026 budget.

"People really love waiting in longer lines for less options and limited availability," Director of the Food Bank of South Jersey Tricia Montgomery commented. "Furthermore, we are ecstatic that Northrop Grumman gets another contract to build 3 more lethal autonomous drones."

"We've always been just $500 million short of finding peace in the Middle East," Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth commented. "Benjamin Franklin may disagree with us, but people who give up liberty for safety are the best patriots."

"Despite the U.S. spending more on defense than the next 9 countries combined, and having 47.4 million people who are food insecure, we wholeheartedly agree with the decision made by congressional Republicans to ignore such considerations while following Trump's request to set the 2026 Pentagon budget at $1.01 trillion," said White House Press Secretary Karoline Leavitt. "Americans who rely solely on SNAP benefits, the disabled, unable to work, and the homeless unanimously supported this decision, and we've received high appreciation for this Administration's decision to prioritize our defense over our communal pantries."

"I couldn't afford to go to the grocery store anymore, so I came here to get some milk, but since they need to ration to meet all of our community's increasing need, I could only grab one quart," Trenton resident Veronica Miller said. "Now with these cuts cancelling 94 million pounds of food aid, I can sleep safe knowing that instead of being able to have enough food for a week, an extra Yemeni migrant detention center can get bombed."

J.K. Rowling Calls For Specialized Bathroom 9¾ For Gender-Nonconforming People

In a new interview with a "low-brow grifter," Harry Potter author J.K. Rowling imagined an alternative urinary station for non-binary and gender-conforming individuals.

This time the writer, often deemed a "TERF" by the media, unveiled a more progressive stance regarding the transgender community. Rather than suggesting queer people use bathrooms according to their assigned sex, Rowling's plan calls for an inoffensive third bathroom that only fantastical creatures can perceive, located behind a magical brick wall. This way, she explained, men's "loos" will be safe from tampon dispensers, and queer people will be able to create their own secret society to explore implicit fantasy racism and marketable, eugenics-based class systems—"away from everyone else," Rowling clarified.

"I have trans friends," said Rowling, "but I don't trust them and they disgust me. We agree on that."

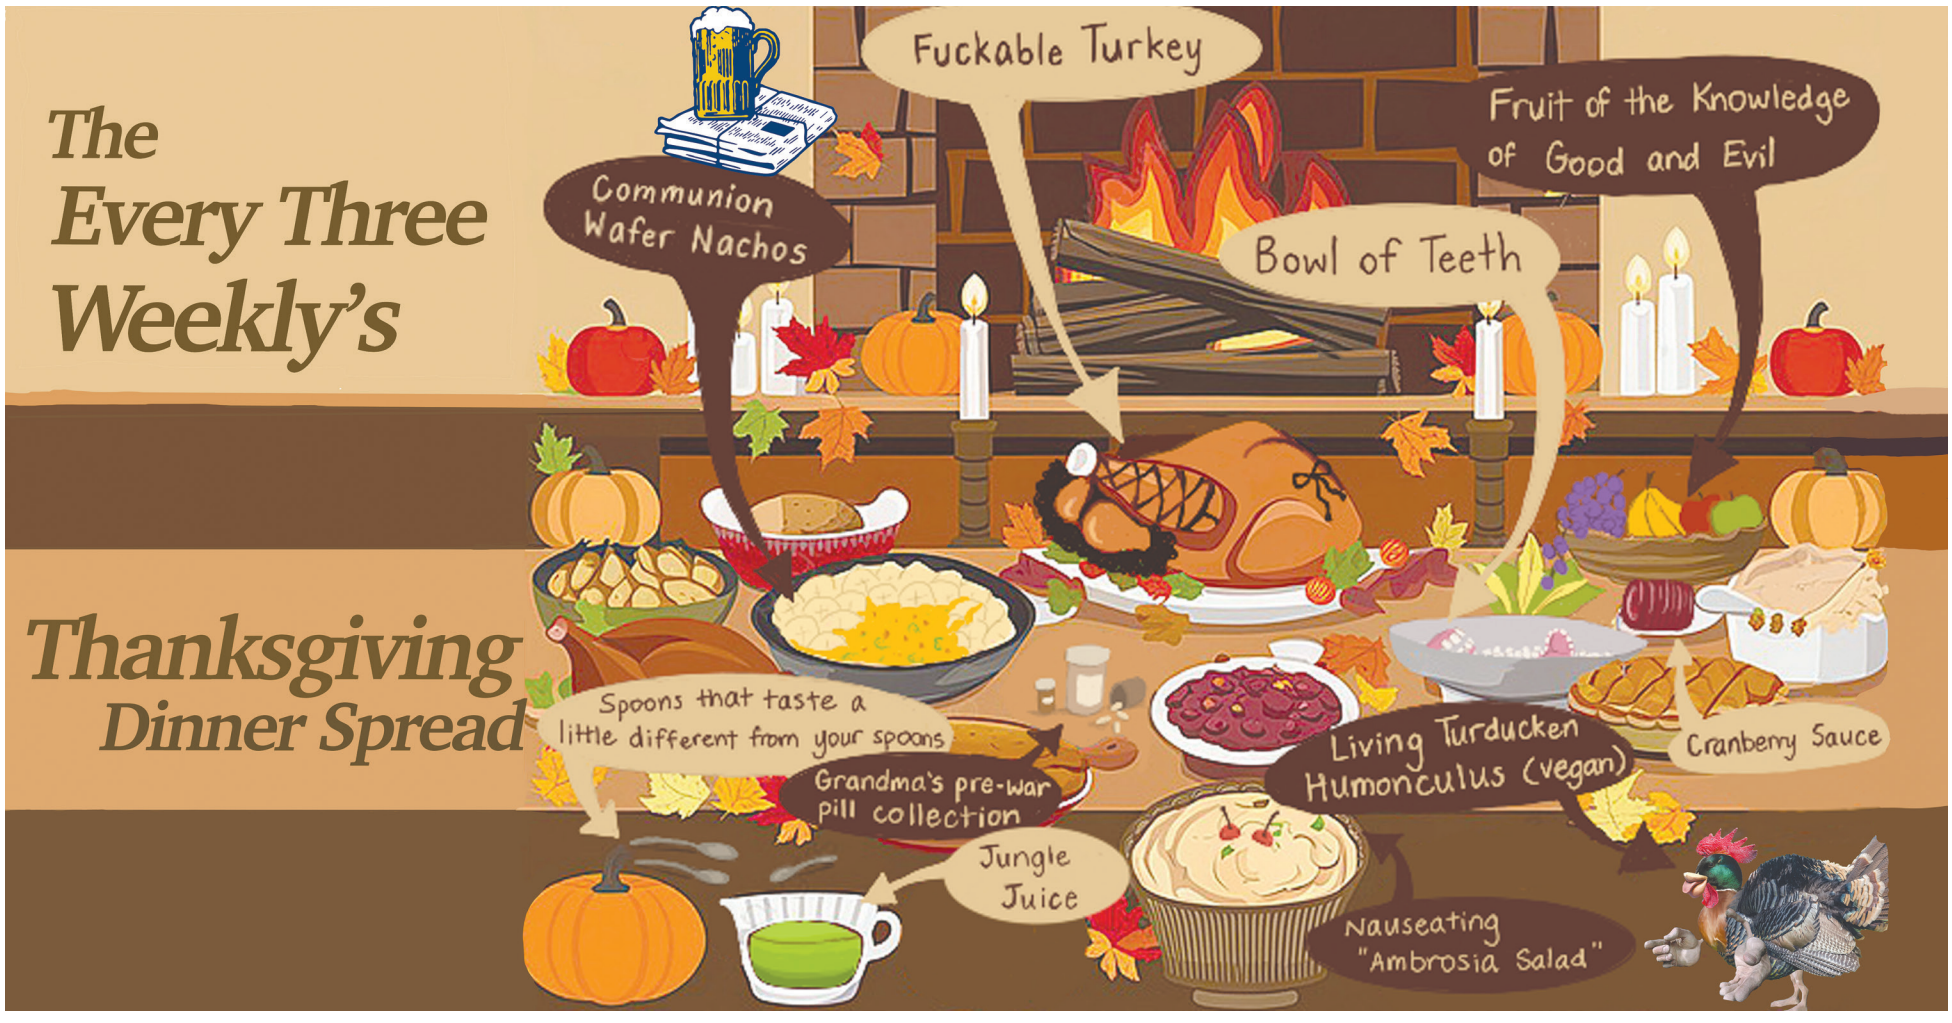
Rowling stated that she plans to explore this concept in a future spinoff series taking place at the pan-European wizarding school known as Durmstrang, whose several thousand students hail from Germany, Scandinavia, all Balkan nations, Greece, and Turkey.

(When asked why the continent of Asia, including the entirety of China and India, lacks a single academy, Rowling replied, "I wouldn't know enough to speak on that.")

"There will be a hidden doorway to the gender-neutral world, where werewolves, goblins, Irish people, and other thinly veiled metaphors roam," Rowling previewed.

At press time, Rowling latently clarified that transgender witches were never allowed to participate in intercollegiate quidditch.

Rowling also said in a tweet that Dumbledore canonically used bathroom 9 and ¾ throughout the original book series.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Lack Of Good Receivers Is Crippling OC Chip Lindsey's Ability To Diversify Play Calling

Dear Edz,

I can't help but notice that every time I go out on the field and catch the frisbee, I'm met with cheers and applause. Everyone but that one guy on the Daily loves me and my ability to catch the frisbee. Not to brag, but in the last game, I only dropped it one time because my boss didn't throw it correctly. Even though I'm a dog, I'm on the sideline every game and can't help but notice when the receivers drop balls thrown right to them. I mean, they literally bounce off of them! I'm worried about the program, so I asked Coach Moore about being slotted in as a walk-on wide receiver. He seemed concerned about my eligibility. Are there any rules against dogs playing football?

– Victor the Frisbee Dog

Dear Victor,

After meticulous scanning of the NCAA Division 1 manual and consultation with several experts, we have confirmed that there is no rule that a dog can't play football. We agree that you have a much higher catch percentage than many of those on the team and would be a valuable asset on the field. We also determined that a frisbee is much harder to fumble than a football which would really help out Bryce Underwood. We would recommend that you sit down with Coach Moore and watch all 14 movies of the Air Bud franchise together in order to further convince him to let you on the team. We wish you the best of luck!

How Can I Get More People At My Office Hours?

Dear Editors,

As you all are students, I am writing to ask for your advice regarding getting more of your peers to come to my office hours. My office hours are by appointment only, with a minimum of 128 hours' notice. They occur seven chimes before Jupiter rises and only when the water energy is not so high and a shadow is not formed. Their location is found through a series of clues hidden in various on campus monuments, which I gave hints to in the syllabus. I didn't bother to look through the midterm feedback, but one student came up to me after class and asked if I could host them on Zoom, whatever that is. Not a single student has stopped by and it's making me lonely.

— Prof. M.

Dear Prof. M,

We can't believe how lazy and unmotivated your students are. We all think that you're so talented and would enroll in your class if the add/drop deadline hadn't passed! One way to fix your attendance problem is to make passive-aggressive Canvas announcements about exam scores not meeting your expectations and then refuse to curve the class because you don't believe in handouts. Make sure you don't give out any practice exams or sample prompts and only ask questions that no one could possibly answer in the time limit. Make sure they're all closed-book, closed-note, hand-written exams, and that students have to go track down a blue book for each one. We also encourage you to forbid your GSI from hosting office hours to encourage students to visit you instead. Let us know if you need more tips!

Are You Planning On Renewing Your Lease Next Year?

Hey Editors,

Hey, sorry to bother you. My friends and I were just wondering if you were planning to renew your lease for next year. You know how it is in Ann Arbor, we figured it was better to just ask directly to avoid getting scammed. It's tough to find a five-bedroom with a great location like this. Do you by chance have any friends that you know who are moving out? Can you give us their address? Even if you plan on staying, do you mind holding onto my number and texting me if you change your mind? It'd be a huge help. Thanks.

–The Sophomore On Your Porch

Hey Sophomores,

How's it going? Yeah, uh, I'm not totally sure right this second. One of us is definitely graduating at the end of the semester, but I think a couple of my roommates might plan to stick around. I'd really have to ask all of them to give you a definite answer, but nobody's home right now, so, y'know. Yeah, I can't really think of anyone else in this area that I know for sure is planning to leave. Maybe try three doors down, I think those guys are all seniors. Oh, wait, that one might actually be a four-bedroom. I can't remember. Anyway, thanks for this illegible sticky note with your phone number on it, I will definitely remember to give you a call once we figure out our living arrangements.

You Must Examine Your Anti-Fraternity Bias

To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing to inform you that I am profoundly disappointed with how your publication portrays fraternities and fraternity culture. The material you publish consistently reflects deeply rooted anti-fraternity biases and reinforces the harmful stereotypes which uphold and enable the systemic oppression of fraternities.

It may seem like a harmless joke when, for example, you publish a headline based on the idea that fraternities mistreat their pledges. However, such jokes contribute to an environment in which pledges believe they are human beings capable of being mistreated and may force a fraternity to stop beating their pledges to death or risk being shut down.

Fraternity brothers have historically been marginalized (into the one percent) and it is the responsibility of non-fraternal people to stand up and speak out for those too strung out on coke and booze to do either.

Do better.

– Bret

Hi Bret,

Thank you for your thoughtful letter. Although it is not your responsibility, we appreciate that you took the time to educate us. It was never our intention to publish harmful material, and we are deeply sorry for any and all harm we have caused to your community. We want you to know that we are listening and we are committed to learning and growing.
